This participatory approach aims to foster a culture of gratitude, elevate awareness of contributions, and motivate continued efforts for children's welfare.

- Superficial Engagement: Critics argue that online voting and expressions of thanks are superficial and do not translate into real policy changes or resource allocation.
- Limited Reach: Digital campaigns may exclude communities with limited internet access, reducing inclusivity.
- Tokenism: Some view the campaigns as symbolic gestures lacking depth in addressing systemic issues faced by children.
- Commercialization Risks: Certain campaigns have been accused of commercial motives, using the movement for branding or promotional purposes rather than genuine social impact.

Assessing Long-Term Impact

While immediate recognition and awareness are evident, assessing long-term impact remains complex:

- Are these campaigns leading to sustained improvements in children's welfare?
- Do they influence policy changes or resource distribution?
- How do they affect societal attitudes toward children and related issues?

Research indicates that while "vote for thanks" initiatives foster community spirit and awareness, their effectiveness in creating systemic change depends on integration with broader advocacy, policy reforms, and resource commitments.
